Thinking Outside the Box This September

Hard to imagine that it is already fall here in Portland. Most of you who know me know that my art business is about getting out there and reaching the public in a variety of ways. This seems to be the year for partnering up with businesses and to also help expose new businesses to you, my valued clients with the hope that you might find this information interesting and will pass it along. In September I am participating in a few fun and informative events:

- This month I was invited by Saks Fifth Avenue to participate in an all day event showcasing must have items of the season. There are an enormous amount of participants for this event from Home Decor stores, galleries, food and wine vendors, floral designers. It is all day and anyone can come, if you have a group who wants a "special presentation" I have provided that information to the right.
- At my temporary art gallery, a financial planner will be speaking on market recovery and two of my artists will be speaking about their techniques. Food and wine will be served.
- 1 of 7, a new concept in art, in support of my friend Jeff Peart, I am supporting his new venture through this newsletter. It has taken him two years to get this up and running and I wish him every success. Hope

Framing Your Art

Many of you already know that I have experience framing art (I appreciate your business!!) Since I have opened my business I have been working with an old co-worker Jill Hodge who runs Custom Frame Design, wholesale framing. In these busy and economical times, a frame project can be a job put on the back burner because it takes too much time to address.

With Caplan Art Designs I make this task convenient, easy and cost effective. I will do all the work for you, from meeting with you to taking the frame project to Jill then making sure I am passing the best price possible to you with delivery of your finished art. So the next time you have something that needs to be framed, I hope you will think of Caplan Art Designs as your one stop frame shop.
